Use your experience in analysis of housing issues to lead a team and manage data collections that support the National Housing Supply Council.

- $96,044 - $109,401
- opportunity to work at the forefront of Government priorities
- specialist roles in providing housing advice

The National Housing Supply Council Section is seeking a senior data analyst, with experience in analysis of housing issues, to lead a team and manage data collections that support the National Housing Supply Council. The role includes responsibilities for data compilation, analysis and modelling using a range of data sources.

Information about the Section/Branch

The National Housing Supply Council Section supports the work of the National Housing Supply Council (NHSC), an independent body that reports to the Government through the Minister for Housing on housing demand and supply projections over the next 20 years. The section's roles include undertaking research and data analysis for the annual State of Supply report and developing this report.

Information on the NHSC is at www.nhsc.org.au.

Description of the role

The senior data analyst will lead a team which manages the data collections that support the National Housing Supply Council's annual State of Supply reports. This includes data compilation, analysis and modelling using a range of data sources in Australia, including ABS economic and social collections. The data team also works closely with data analysts in state and territory governments.
